

Dr Tanya Ahmed

Trauma Psychiatrist

Dr Tanya Ahmed, FRANZCP, is a psychiatrist with a background in public health, leadership, health communications and general practice. As a public health clinician, her early career work with Indigenous and refugee populations included dealing with the impact and manifestations of trauma. As a psychiatrist across public and private inpatient and outpatient mental health services she focuses on embedding trauma-informed care and humanising mental health services. Tanya holds a Bachelor of Medicine and Bachelor of Surgery from the University of Adelaide (1991), a Master of Public Health and Tropical Medicine from James Cook University and a Graduate Diploma of Health Services Management from UNSW. Tanya currently works in emergency psychiatry at Sydney's Prince of Wales Hospital and as a VMO at a private trauma inpatient service at St John of God Hospital in Richmond, NSW, and she is on the advisory board for a new trauma hospital development.
