

Jenny Stathis

Special Counsel, Australian Prudential Regulation Authority

Jenny is a highly experienced lawyer, with expertise in competition and consumer law, banking law, litigation and issues facing government lawyers.

Jenny is currently seconded (for the second time) to the Australian Prudential Regulation Authority (APRA) as a Special Counsel. During her first secondment, she assisted APRA respond to the Financial Services Royal Commission and contributed to the implementation of the recommendations in the Final Report, including contributing to the review of APRA's enforcement strategy. Jenny's substantive role is as a Principal Lawyer in the Australian Competition and Consumer Commission's Competition and Consumer Law Unit.

Jenny has also worked for major law firms - the Competition & Trade group of Freshfields Bruckhaus Deringer in London, and the Litigation Group (specialising in competition and consumer protection) of Allens.

Jenny is a member of the Law Society's Government Solicitors and Business Law Committees and represents the Law Society on Standard Australia's Committee on Organisational Governance. She is also a member of the Engagement and Communications Committee of the Australian Government Legal Service.

Jenny is passionate about the profession and playing her part in making it even better.
